Introduction

Talking identity is a unit of work about identity, primarily from an Aboriginal perspective, and is designed for teachers of Stage 2 classes.

This teacher’s handbook is a component of the Talking identity kit which also comprises a copy of the texts: The fat and juicy place and Rak Niwili as well as an audiotape of the song Rak Niwili. These materials are an essential requirement for the topics of work in Talking identity.

Throughout the unit emphasis has been placed on community consultation and participation. Following local community protocol will ensure the success of the unit. It is presumed that students have already been exposed to work in Aboriginal studies in Stage 1 and that this unit of work would not be the first contact with the Aboriginal community for teachers and students.

The unit is based on the Stage 2 outcomes in the K–6 syllabus in Human Society and Its Environment.

Some of the indicators may be found in the syllabus. Teachers are encouraged to create indicators that illustrate the outcomes and to look for other indicators in the work of their students.

The unit consists of nine topics, each organised as follows:

• Teaching program
• Student worksheets
• Teacher overheads.

“Materials required” has been included as a guide to the resources required by the teacher. All worksheets and overhead transparency black line masters are provided.

The section “Teacher’s notes and background information” gives the teacher a basic understanding of the content and addresses the issues of consultation and protocol with Aboriginal communities. The notes are not exhaustive, but provide a good starting point and a quick reference.

Also listed are a number of books which could be used to extend students’ knowledge and understanding of Aboriginal identity, in particular, and of Aboriginal Australia generally.

Talking identity (Stage 2 for Aboriginal Australia) is part of a set of units developed by Professional Support and Curriculum Directorate to support the implementation of the K–6 syllabus in Human Society and Its Environment. Other units include Where the sun rises … (Stage 1 for Asia) and By word of mouth (Stage 3 for Federation).

Bronwyn Bancroft
You don’t even look Aboriginal, 1991
gouache, collage on paper
Mollie Gowing Acquisition Fund for Contemporary Aboriginal Art 1993
Art Gallery of New South Wales

Bronwyn Bancroft’s painting and photomontage stress her Aboriginal identity with photographs of herself in circular motifs, linked to photographs of Aboriginal family members, who line the top of the painting above her. Bancroft is shown at different stages in her life, connected to her Aboriginal family.

This painting relates to an incident in Bronwyn’s career when, after giving a lecture at an art college, a student questioned Bronwyn’s right to speak as an Aboriginal person when she did not “look Aboriginal” (in that student’s eyes). To Aboriginal people, the phrase “You don’t even look Aboriginal” is offensive and reveals an ignorance of Aboriginal Australia.

Statements of Aboriginal identity

“Being Aboriginal has nothing to do with the colour of your skin or the shape of your nose. It is a spiritual feeling, an identity you know in your heart. It is a unique feeling that may be difficult for non-Aboriginal people to understand.”

Linda Burney, 1994

(extract from Aboriginal education training & development resource: presenter’s handbook OHT 12
© NSW Department of School Education 1996)

“Aboriginality is not just a physical manifestation of Aboriginal identity, but includes a combination of cultural heritage, spirituality and an intrinsic link with the land.”

Years 7–10 Aboriginal Studies Syllabus

“Our identities are made from the building up of those parts of our lives which are strong and positive, from all the things we feel we belong to and belong to us.”

(statement from Dewdney, A. & Michels, D. More than black and white p. 75)

“Identity in Koori Society is based on relationship to land and the clan as well as shared language, culture and experiences. The colour of hair, eyes or skin has nothing to do with one’s identity.”

1996 Aboriginal Education Policy

The goals of this policy are comprehensive in order to take account of the complexity of the issues involved, the ways in which they interconnect and the differences among schools and communities. Making progress towards these goals is the responsibility of all personnel within the Department of Education and Training. The goals are:

- Curriculum, teaching and assessment programs will be challenging and culturally appropriate.
- Schools will have a supportive learning environment.
- Aboriginal communities and the Department of Education and Training will become partners in the whole educational process.
- All staff and students of the Department of Education and Training will have knowledge and understanding of and respect for Aboriginal Australia.

| Educational outcomes for Aboriginal students are enhanced so that they are comparable with those of the rest of the school population. | • Researching appropriate methodology and content across all key learning areas.
• Accepting and valuing Aboriginal English and developing teaching programs which use it as a teaching tool. |
| Culturally appropriate teaching strategies and assessment methods are implemented. | • Incorporation of knowledge from local Aboriginal communities in teaching and learning programs.
• Involvement of Aboriginal parents, community and caregivers in the evaluation of educational programs, processes and practices. |
| Aboriginal people are empowered to become active partners in the decision making process. | • Involvement of Aboriginal people in the planning, provision and evaluation of educational services.
• Participation by school or district representatives of the Department in the local and regional AECGs. |
| All students participate in Aboriginal studies programs. | • Preparation of and provision to schools of curriculum support materials containing Aboriginal content and perspectives complementing existing syllabuses.
• Development of culturally appropriate teaching resources in negotiation with NSW AECG Inc. |
Outcomes

The outcomes of the policy are set out in relation to each of the policy goals, including priority areas for action to achieve these goals. Against each outcome is a list of performance strategies as guides to action. The list is not exhaustive and schools will need to adapt and, where necessary, devise, strategies that are appropriate to their own circumstances.

Consultation and protocol with Aboriginal communities

It is important to consult with Aboriginal communities and organisations to ensure that teaching and curriculum programs are inclusive of Aboriginal peoples’ needs and perspectives. Consulting will provide the basis for a mutually beneficial relationship between the school and local Aboriginal communities. It is important to recognise that each community is different and that protocols of consultation will vary across localities.

Most Aboriginal communities have rules embedded in their culture. To address these rules teachers will have to consult using the correct protocol. Consultation is a two-way, ongoing process, where all involved learn from each other through negotiation, listening, flexibility and open-mindedness.

To gain the most effective outcomes in the consultation process it is important to:

- develop an understanding of Aboriginality. Aboriginality is about culture, identity, shared experience, world view and family a matter of our style
- spend time and effort developing positive relationships between the school and the community and between people. As you prove yourself to be someone who likes spending time with Aboriginal people, information will be shared with you
- be introduced to the Aboriginal community by someone from that community or by someone that the community knows and trusts. Be aware that Aboriginal community resources are stretched to the limit. Make sure that you give plenty of notice about visits or meetings
- be sensitive to events and upheavals in the community, e.g. funerals. Be willing to adapt your program or approaches on advice from the Aboriginal community. Always respond to requests and concerns put forward by the Aboriginal people who are working with or advising you on the program
- be willing to share your skills and knowledge with Aboriginal people when requested. Recognise and respect Aboriginal people’s skills and expertise and always acknowledge the contribution of Aboriginal people to your program
• be familiar with Aboriginal English and be aware of the significant level of non-verbal communication that occurs in Aboriginal communities. Aboriginal people read body language easily and consider it a valid form of communication. Ensure that your body language is consistent with your intentions and attitudes

• be aware of the importance of sharing; people are more important than things or systems in Aboriginal culture

• make sure, when consulting with Elders or receiving stories or knowledge from them, that Elders are acknowledged and paid at a consultant’s rate. In Aboriginal communities knowledge is owned and shared only for fair trade and with good reason

• consult widely, across a range of Aboriginal organisations and communities, and over time. Some NSW towns have up to three or more distinct Aboriginal communities within them

• organise meetings in places readily accessible to community members. The school is not always a good place. You may also want to consider transport and child minding. Best practice is to have the meeting very close to, if not in, the local community.

Historical background of Aboriginal languages

The Indigenous languages of Australia have been under threat since the invasion in 1788. Aboriginal languages were severely affected by colonialism and racism. Aboriginal people were punished for speaking their languages. Aboriginal languages were not recognised by non-Aboriginal people. All of these factors had a devastating effect on the preservation of Aboriginal languages, especially in NSW.

Of more than 250 different Indigenous languages and 500 to 600 dialects in Australia before white colonisation, about 30 remain in use as a medium of communication.

According to the National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Survey conducted by the Australian Bureau of Statistics in 1994, about 15 percent of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people speak an Indigenous language.
European languages have long traditions transmitted through reading and writing. Indigenous Australian languages have an even longer tradition, but are transmitted orally and by example in everyday activities.

!Map of Aboriginal languages and nations in NSW

Few English speakers have been prepared to learn Aboriginal languages. Pidgin English was imposed upon Indigenous people, who were then looked down upon for speaking it. Some Aboriginal communities developed very complex creoles, using mostly English words and Indigenous language structures. Some of these are still spoken today.

On many of the missions and reserves, Aboriginal people were prevented from speaking their language. English was forced upon Aboriginal peoples and became the common language. For other Aboriginal people, who were forced to relocate to other areas outside their original language groups, speaking Aboriginal languages was not easily maintained.

Many communities over time have had to develop variants of Aboriginal English as a home language while still maintaining aspects of language.

Language use in Aboriginal Australia is very much a factor of kinship. The way people speak to others, to whom they speak and the forms of language used are determined by the relationships of the speakers. Aboriginal people have always been multilingual.
Facts about Aboriginal languages

- Many Aboriginal languages are spoken throughout Australia.
- Aboriginal people don’t all speak the same Aboriginal language.
- There are more than 70 Aboriginal languages in NSW.
- Aboriginal languages are as complex and rich in vocabulary as any other language.
- Aboriginal languages are alive in many Aboriginal communities, which are at different stages of development in the revival and maintenance of their language.
- Aboriginal communities are actively involved in the processes of revival and maintenance.
- Aboriginal English and Aboriginal languages are closely related. Aboriginal English can contain elements of Aboriginal languages.
- Aboriginal English is a dialect of English governed by its own set of rules.
- There are first and second language speakers in NSW.
- Numerous Aboriginal communities have successful language centres involving members of the local Aboriginal community.
- Many Aboriginal people identify themselves by their language group.
- Even if Aboriginal people don’t speak their language on a daily basis, it is still important to them.
- Aboriginal languages are extremely important to Aboriginal people, because they reinforce pride in culture and identity.
- Aboriginal languages are to be approached with sensitivity and respect for community views.
- Aboriginal community groups should be regarded as the owners of their languages, with all the exclusive rights that ownership bestows.

For further information on NSW Aboriginal languages view the video and read the booklet in the resource Talkin’ language.
The Dreaming & Dreaming stories

The Dreaming is always with you, it is spiritual. Dreaming is where it all began and it is still with us today. You go back in time, like a memory that continues today, everything starts in the Dreaming.

Aunty June Barker

Dreaming is the embodiment of Aboriginal creation which gives meaning to everything.
(Aboriginal Studies Syllabus Years 7–10, Board of Studies, 1993, p. 49).

Dreaming is a non-Aboriginal word. Each language group has its own word to describe the complexity of Dreaming.

Dreaming stories are a part of this complexity. Dreaming stories are a part of the spiritual beliefs and religion that teach and guide all members of the community to an understanding of their society’s rules, behaviours, environments and relationships.
It is important that Dreaming stories are used properly in the classroom and not misinterpreted as fairy stories or myths. Dreaming stories are the binding force of a continuum between the past, present and future for Aboriginal people. Dreaming stories explain creation and deal with the responsibilities of the people to care for their land and each other. These stories are multilayered in meaning, and as a child grows and matures, a greater depth of meaning is revealed.

It is important that the Aboriginal children from the school in which you teach know generally about Dreaming stories and, in particular and where possible, know Dreaming stories from their own country.

Teachers should be aware that some Aboriginal students might find it difficult to know their own family history, as it might be difficult—and painful in some cases—to trace the past. Aboriginal children should (if at all possible) know the language group to which they belong. Teachers should encourage all students to value their past and present identity. Students should know the name of, and respect, the language group in which the school is situated.

Teachers should be sensitive to the fact that children’s parents and grandparents may belong to the stolen generations and may find their links difficult to trace. Encouragement and community knowledge about family names can help to build a strong individual identity.

Before recording an Aboriginal Dreaming story in any way, permission must be sought from the storyteller and his or her community. Dreaming stories are the intellectual property of the community from which the story originated. Throughout Aboriginal history since invasion, Aboriginal peoples have had their intellectual property stolen from them. This is a very delicate and sensitive area of publication and great pains must be taken to respect the oral culture and the ownership of Dreaming stories.
Glossary

Aboriginal Used as an adjective in reference to the original inhabitants of Australia. The term may be associated with people, points of view, cultures and communities. The term should always commence with a capital when referring to Aboriginal peoples within Australia.¹

Aboriginality Aboriginality is much more than a physical manifestation of Aboriginal identity. It includes a combination of cultural heritage, spirituality and an intrinsic link with the land.³

Aboriginal English Aboriginal English is a dialect of Australian English and has been the “home language” or first language of Aboriginal people since their contact with non-Aboriginal people. Aboriginal English is a spoken language, but it also involves body language, silence, pauses and humour. Aboriginal English can include words from Aboriginal languages.

AECG (NSW) The Aboriginal Education Consultative Group Inc. (AECG) is a community-based Aboriginal organisation. Its purpose is to ensure social justice for Aboriginal peoples through education and training. The role and mandate of the AECG (NSW) is to provide community-based direction on Indigenous education and training.¹

art Aboriginal arts are many sided and inter-connected. In pre-contact society, visual arts were usually associated with ceremonies which also used storytelling, music and dance. Embedded in the fabric of society, visual arts served educational, religious and social purposes. The vitality and flexibility of Aboriginal culture can be seen in the care and skill with which Aboriginal people used new ways of painting, new colours or media, and new stories in their art, and have used their arts for new purposes.²

bush tucker Traditional food. Here bush means Aboriginal but also with some sense of wild, not domesticated. This term is also used in the non-Aboriginal community, though not always with a cultural distinction between Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal food, so that damper and billy tea might be included in the non-Aboriginal sense of “bush tucker”.³

ceremonies Always involve song and dance and body decoration, and may involve other forms of artistic expression. The ownership, management and performance of ceremonies are dependent upon knowledge and status, and in turn confer status upon individuals.²

colonisation The intentional occupation of land by a foreign country.¹

community(ies) Important elements of a community are country, family ties and shared experience. Community is about interrelatedness and belonging, and is central to Aboriginality. Aboriginal people may belong to more than one community. The use of community or communities in the syllabus indicates that any one community may in fact consist of several communities.⁴
Talking identity

culture  The accepted and traditionally patterned ways of behaving; common understanding shared by the members of a group or community. Includes land, language, ways of living and working, artistic expression, relationships and identity.5

discrimination  When one person or group is treated differently from another group. This is harmful if the person or group is treated badly for no good reason.

(the) Dreaming  The embodiment of Aboriginal creation that gives meaning to everything; the essence of Aboriginal belief about creation, and spiritual and physical existence. It establishes the rules governing relationships between people, the land and all things for Aboriginal peoples. The Dreaming extends from the beginning of time to the present and into the future.1

Elder  Elders are custodians of knowledge. They are chosen and accepted by their own communities and are highly respected.4

identity  All those parts of ourself that are strong and positive, as well as negative. All the things that we belong to and all those things that belong to us. Who we are! Identity in Aboriginal societies is based on relationship to land and the clan as well as shared language, culture and experiences. The colour of hair, eyes or skin has nothing to do with one's identity.2

Indigenous peoples  In Australia, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples. The term should always commence with a capital when referring to Australian Indigenous people.5

invasion  The forced takeover of a land and the subjugation of its people.5

kinship  A key aspect of Aboriginal cultures and values. It includes the importance of all relationships, and of being related to and belonging to land.4

land  The term land is used by Aboriginal people to describe their ecosystems: a sum total of spiritual beliefs, including Dreamings, all living things including totems, all physical factors such as sacred sites, water, air and geographical features.4

land rights  The evolving struggle of Aboriginal people for the absolute legal and moral acknowledgment of prior ownership of this land and recognition of all the accompanying rights and obligations that flow from this association.2

lore  The learning and transmission of cultural heritage.4

NATSI Week  National Aboriginal and Islander Day of Celebration (NAIDOC) Week had its origins in 1957, commencing as NADOC Day, a day for Australians to focus their attention on Aboriginal communities. The focus was extended in 1975 to a week’s celebration of Aboriginal culture and heritage. In 1989 the word Islander was added to form NAIDOC Week. It is now known as National Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Week or NATSI Week.1

nation or country  The area of land, river and sea that is the traditional land of each Aboriginal language group or community.1
prejudice Usually an angry feeling or action towards a person who belongs to a certain group.

racism When one cultural group of people treats another cultural group of people badly. They do this because they falsely believe they are better than the other group.

Reconciliation The process of Reconciliation aims to improve relations between Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders and other Australians, through increasing understanding of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander history, cultures, past dispossession and present disadvantages. When used in this sense, the term should always begin with a capital.¹

resistance One of the responses of Aboriginal peoples to invasion, including violent or political opposition.⁵

social justice A value that favours measures aimed at decreasing or eliminating inequities.¹

songs Song is the central element of performance, and may be performed without associated ritual, dance and body design. When songs are performed correctly, in the appropriate ritual context, they are believed to tap the creative power of the Dreaming.² Songs, in the context of this kit, may also refer to Aboriginal contemporary songs performed and written by such artists as Jimmy Little and Christine Anu.

stereotyping Regarding everyone in a group as being the same with no individual differences. This is usually a negative way of looking at people.

Stolen Generations The term used for the significant number of Aboriginal children who were forcibly removed from their families. While separation of Aboriginal children from their families had taken place from the time of colonisation, the most damaging and extensive removals took place in the twentieth century. The removal of Aboriginal children from their families was government policy in all Australian States. The policy has had an extremely damaging legacy on the self-esteem and identity of those who were subjected to it.¹

Survival Day Celebrated within Aboriginal communities on 26 January, Survival Day is an acknowledgment of the cultural, physical and spiritual survival of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples since British colonisation in 1788.¹

technology That part of culture which assists people to interact with their environment. It includes knowledge, social organisation, systems, techniques, processes and products.⁴

PART 2
• In preparation for Worksheets 2 and 5 read Part One of The fat and juicy place (time allowance: 20–30 minutes).

• Discuss the significance of design on the cover and have students predict character and events. Suggested prompts: Where is this book set? What characters are in the story? What is interesting about the front cover? Who wrote the book?

Using information from Part One of The fat and juicy place, discuss with students and jointly construct a concept map for Jack, using Worksheet 2 (e.g. food, language spoken, favourite activities).

• Using an enlarged map of the local area, have students identify where they live in the area.

Refer to Worksheet 3: Aboriginal languages and countries in NSW and identify with students the Aboriginal country they are living in. This can be more clearly done by making an overhead of Worksheet 4: Map of NSW, with the local area marked on it, and overlaying onto an overhead of Worksheet 3.

Discuss with class: Who are the local Aboriginal custodians of the land? If more than one Aboriginal group is represented as the original custodian, why might this be? Why might maps differ about what is the Aboriginal language group for that area?

Have students colour in their local language group on Worksheet 3. Students can also identify two other language groups and colour them in different colours. The exact boundaries can be found in The Encyclopaedia of Aboriginal Australia.

• On Worksheet 5, ask each student to complete each section for him or herself. Students can then compare and discuss their responses in terms of similarities and differences.

Suggested prompts: Ask students... Which of you have the same symbols? Is there a reason for this? Where did the rules you follow come from? Who guides you in choosing the food you eat?

Have students transfer information about Jack from Worksheet 2 and record responses on Worksheet 5.

PART 3
• As a final activity to gain a better understanding of the interrelationships of Aboriginal Dreaming, ask students to cut up the 15 connections on Worksheet 6, which make up the Dreaming, and place them around the image on Worksheet 6a. Students can then colour in the worksheet.

Dharawal also spelt Tharawal

Note: The language map used on this page to identify Aboriginal nations is one of many Aboriginal language maps available. Consult with the local Aboriginal community to ensure accuracy of information and preferred spelling for the local Aboriginal language.

Community symbols

Task:
To investigate and identify the symbols of some community groups.

Materials required:
- Text: The fat and juicy place (provided in kit)
- Student worksheets 10, 11, 12, 13 & 14
- Australian flags (Appendix 2)

</tbody>
</table>

Teachers’ notes (see Appendix 2)

Suggested prompts: Ask students...

What are the colours of each flag?
What does each section of each flag represent?
Who designed each flag?

Using Worksheet 11, ask students to colour the different parts of each flag according to the description in Appendix 2. Do this as a joint activity and discuss the meaning of each part as it is coloured in.

Have students cut out the parts and assemble into the flags on Worksheet 12.

Discuss the flags of different countries which represent some of the students in the class.
Teaching/learning sequence

- Using Worksheet 13 have students investigate symbols and colours used in Aboriginal community symbols and logos, as well as school symbols, i.e. uniform and badge.

  Suggested prompts: Ask students...

  Why have people designed these logos?
  Why have different logos been used to represent particular places?
  Why do they use “this” symbol?

  Ask students to identify symbols and logos used within the community, and draw some of these symbols and logos on Worksheet 14.

- Whole class activity: On the chalkboard have students produce their own class logo or flag, incorporating an Aboriginal perspective.

Outcomes and indicators

CUS2.3

Explains how shared customs, practices, symbols, languages and traditions in communities contribute to Australian and community identities.

- Identifies symbols used by the Aboriginal community and explains the meaning of designs used in these symbols and logos
- Identifies some community groups that people belong to
- Gathers information about the roles, symbols and practices of some community groups, including Aboriginal community groups
- Explains the connection between symbols and community identity.

<tr>
<td>• Read Rak Niwilli to the class. Ask students to locate places on the map shown at the back of the book. Display Overhead 1. With the class, using the book, locate where each character comes from. Next to each location write the character’s name. Suggested prompts: Ask students... Where does Niwilli come from? What connection does Niwilli’s name have to his family? Does anyone in the class have a name given to them that has a special meaning?</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

[Note: Niwilli is an ancestral name from Marrityefin language group from Moyle River. “Rak” means “family belonging to” in Ngangiwumerri or Ngangikurungkurr languages.]
Teaching and learning sequence

- Evaluate, through discussion, the effectiveness of the book presentation.

   Possible discussion points: Ask students...
   - Why do you think the author has chosen not to place the title on the front cover?
   - Do we need to have the title on the front cover? Why or why not?

- Display Overhead 1 and demonstrate steps involved in students recording information on Worksheet 15.

   Using the book and/or Overhead 1 have students record on Worksheet 15, next to each character’s name:
   - their totem or animal
   - their location (where they are from)
   - their language group or nation
   - the direction they must travel to get to Niwili’s party (i.e. north or south-east etc...).

- Display students’ work.

- Have students listen to the tape recording of Rak Niwili. Students can then follow on Aboriginal languages map, the nations, from which the characters come and through which they travel to get to Niwili’s party.

Outcomes and indicators

ENS2.5
Describes places in the local area and other parts of Australia and explains their significance.

- recognises that Aboriginal nations and boundaries are a way of understanding the Australian continent
- locates rivers, cities and places using locational terminology, such as north, south, east or west.

Belonging to country

Teaching and learning sequence

- Have students bring the key concepts back to the classroom.

  Ask the reporter from each section to meet with the reporters from other groups (for the same sense) to discuss findings between each of the groups.

  Have each group transfer the key concepts onto Worksheets 17, 18, 19, in either written or pictorial. These worksheets can then be made into posters.

- Display posters.
- Reintroduce Rak Niwili.

  Review the countries to which each family member belongs.

  Choose one of the characters and look at the type of environment in which that character lives, e.g. coastal, bush, river etc.

  Brainstorm:
  - What would the environment look like? (water, trees, rocks etc.)
  - What would the environment sound like? (waves crashing, birds chirping)
  - What would the environment feel like? (hot, windy, sandy)
  - What would the environment smell like? (dusty, wet, salty)

  Have students list their responses on Worksheet 20.

- Using Worksheet 21 ask students to write places they regard as special to them, e.g. home, cubby house, Uncle’s house, Nanna’s house etc…

  Next to each place ask students to write what makes each place special:
  - Feels like...
  - Sounds like...
  - Smells like...
  - Looks like...

  Note: It is important at the end of this lesson to introduce to students the concept of Aboriginal peoples’ special relationship with the land. This relationship is part of the Dreaming that was examined in Topic 1. Please refer to Appendix 4 for background information.

Outcomes and indicators

| ENS2.5 | Describes places in the local area and other parts of Australia and explains their significance.
|        | • describes different environments of Aboriginal communities around Australia. |
| ENS2.6 | Describes people’s interactions with environments and identifies responsible ways of interacting with environments.
|        | • demonstrates an aesthetic awareness of environments, both natural and built, relating these environments to their key body senses. |

Ask students to complete the top section of the table from Worksheet 23, to explain “the rules of the Elders” from The bunyip. |

Roles, rules and responsibilities

Teaching and learning sequence

- Discuss and record other rules we have in the community on the retrieval chart on Worksheet 23.
- Write the class rules.
- Write the school rules.
- Write the rules students have at home.
- Optional box for other rules students may have in their local community, e.g. soccer or netball club etc.

Display “rules worksheet”, Worksheet 23, in classroom.

- Using Worksheet 24, have the class jointly fill out each section based on The bunyip:
  - Students write the title of the book.
  - They list the characters in order of appearance.
  - They write a short phrase or sentence to describe the main point or moral of the story.
  - They illustrate their favourite section of the book.

Note: One purpose for Dreaming stories is to establish rules governing relationships between people, the land and all things for Aboriginal peoples.

- Ask students to read The little flying fox (Appendix 1)

- Using the information from The little flying fox, have the students, in groups, complete Worksheet 24, following the guidelines of The bunyip.

- Using The Aboriginal languages and countries map in NSW, have students locate the areas in which Dreaming stories, The bunyip and The little flying fox, originated.

Note: The bunyip is a Dreaming story from the Wiradjuri Nation. The little flying fox is a Dreaming story shared by a number of language groups in the far north of NSW and over the Queensland border.

Lesson extensions

- After the interview with the Elder or community member, discuss and expand recorded material with more detail.

Read and review recordings to jointly construct the Elder or community member’s oral history.

- Have students, in pairs, develop their own story plan, using the model from Worksheet 25. The students can then create their own story based on this model.

Outcomes and indicators

SSS2.8
Investigates rights, responsibilities and decision making processes in the school and community, and demonstrates how participation can contribute to the equality of their school and community life.

- gathers information about rules from the text, The bunyip, and discusses and records how these rules relate to school and home
- contributes to decision making processes in the class, school and community.

CUS2.4
Describes different viewpoints, ways of living, languages and belief systems in a variety of communities.

- listens to a Dreaming story and, using information from that story, constructs a story of their own highlighting the importance of rules and responsibilities in the community.

  • racism
  • identity
  • discrimination
  • prejudice
  • stereotyping.
• Using Worksheet 25, have students cut the word sections from the meaning sections and mix them up. Students then have to correctly match the words to their meanings. Groups discuss results.
• Conduct a class discussion, reading out each of the words and its meaning. Discuss the meanings of each of the words.
• Generalisations & stereotyping
  Introduce students to the concept of generalisations. Ask students to name a food they don’t like and ask them to describe it. Come up with generalisations such as:
  Sweet potatoes taste terrible.
  Sweet potatoes are orange in colour.
  Therefore, all orange foods taste terrible.
  Introduce and discuss a generalisation that has to do with cultural identity such as:
  Joe Flick is quiet.
  Joe Flick is Italian.
  Therefore, all Italians are quiet.
  Discuss with students that once a generalisation becomes fixed in people’s minds it may become a stereotype.

In the following discussion, explain in detail why each of the statements are facts or stereotypes or, even better, have the students explain why. | CUS2.4
Describes different viewpoints, ways of living, languages and belief systems in a variety of communities.
- identifies examples of statements promoting stereotypes
- constructs a mind map that shows an understanding of the concepts of identity, racism and prejudice
- identifies examples of systemic unfairness, e.g. discrimination based on race, skin colour, language, religion or gender. |
| Discrimination and prejudice
Refresh students’ memories by giving them a definition of discrimination or, better yet, have them provide you with their own definition of the term.
Ask students to identify all the types of people they think are discriminated against in our society. From their responses make a list on the board. Include on the list racial and ethnic groups, some religious groups, handicapped people, poor people, old people, children and certain language and cultural groups.
Have the students identify some of the ways in which these people are discriminated against. Finish the discussion with suggested positive changes that can be made to overcome each of these examples of discrimination. | |
| Identity
Using Worksheet 27, direct students in constructing a mind map of all the things that they think shape their identity, including any negative stereotyping, prejudices and discrimination that they or members of their family might have been exposed to. | |

Hello! My name is Pauline and I'm a storyteller. My favourite stories are Dreaming stories. When you listen carefully, you can hear lessons that come from the Dreaming. Here is a story from the Dreaming about the little flying fox.

When the world was young, flying fox thought he was a bird.

He went to the Great Spirit who was here teaching the birds how to be birds, like how to make nests, how to lay eggs, how to find food.

The little flying fox went over to the Great Spirit and asked him if he would teach him how to be a bird.

The Great Spirit said, “You are not a bird you are a bat. I will teach you how to be a bat.”

But the little flying fox would not listen.

Little flying fox got under the feet of the Great Spirit and cried out, “Teach me to be a bird, I want to be a bird now!”

Well, the Great Spirit stopped. He picked the little flying fox up by his feet and hung him upside down in the branch of a tree and left him there to teach him a lesson.

When the Great Spirit had finished with all the birds he went over to the little flying fox and said, ‘Have you learnt your lesson little flying fox? Do you know that you are a bat and not a bird?’

But little flying fox had not learnt and he said, “I don’t care, I can hang upside down forever if I want to. I still think I’m a bird!”

Well, the Great Spirit left the little flying fox hanging upside down in the branches of trees forever, to remind him that he is not a bird, but a bat.

And that is the reason why the flying fox hangs upside down in the branches of trees, instead of sitting the right way around like birds.

And that is the reason why the flying fox hangs upside down in the branches of trees, instead of sitting the right way around like birds.

[The little flying fox is a Dreaming story shared by a number of language groups in the far north of NSW and over the Queensland border.]

Australian flags

Australian flag
Flag adopted: 14 April 1954
Flag proportion: 1:2
Australia’s first Federal flag was chosen from a national flag competition held in 1901. Five people submitted almost identical designs. These people were declared joint winners and shared the prizemoney. They were Annie Dorrington, Ivor Evans, Leslie Hawkins, Egbert Nuttall and William Stevens. The original design has been changed three times since 1901. The present design was officially adopted in 1954.

In the upper left-hand corner of the flag is the Union Jack. On the right-hand side are 5 white stars, representing the Southern Cross, a constellation of stars generally visible only in the southern hemisphere. Each of these stars has 7 points except for the smallest star, which has only five. Directly below the Union Jack is a large 7-pointed white star called the Federation Star, representing the federation of the colonies of Australia on 1 January 1901. There is one point for each of the six original states, and one to represent all of Australia’s internal and external territories.

Aboriginal flag
Flag adopted: 14 July 1995 (in use since 12 July 1971)
Flag proportion: 2:3
The Aboriginal flag was designed by Harold Thomas, an Arrente man from central Australia. It was first flown on National Aboriginal and Islander Day in July 1971 in Adelaide, South Australia. The flag is symbolic to Aboriginal people in a number of ways: the black represents the Aboriginal people, past, present and future; the yellow represents the sun, the giver of life; the red represents the earth, red ochre and the spiritual relationship to the land. The flag became a powerful uniting symbol of identity for Aboriginal people across the country when it was flown at the Aboriginal Embassy in Canberra in 1972.

The little red, yellow & black (and green and blue and white) book: a short guide to Indigenous Australia, Australian Institute for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies, 1994, p. 12.

Torres Strait Islander flag
Flag adopted: 14 July 1995 (in use since 29 May 1992)
Flag proportion: 2:3
The Torres Strait Islander flag was designed by Bernard Namok from Thursday Island and launched in 1992. It features three horizontal bands, two of them green for the land and one blue for the sea. These bands are separated by black stripes which represent the people. A further symbol of all Torres Strait Islander people is the white dhari—the traditional headdress. Underneath this is a white five-pointed star which represents the five island groups: eastern, western, central, Port Kennedy area and North Peninsula area.

In the Dreaming, there were two Koori children. The boy was called Surrin and the girl was called Lulardeea. They were from the Wiradjuri Nation.

The children were told by the Elders, “Never, ever go to the river alone.”
“Why?” they asked.
“Because a big, scary, hairy, hungry bunyip lives in the river and he likes to eat children.”

One hot day the children decided to disobey their Elders and go for a swim in the river. On the way they met an old, dusty, jumping kangaroo.
“Where are you going?” asked the kangaroo.
“We are going to the river for a swim,” said the children.
“No, don’t go!” said the old, dusty, jumping kangaroo.
“A big, scary, hairy, hungry bunyip lives in the river and he will eat you.”
“Don’t be silly! We don’t believe in bunyips!” said the children. Off they went on their way to the river.

Next they met a long-necked, long-legged, sharp-clawed emu.
“Where are you going?” asked the emu.
“We are going to the river for a swim,” said the children.
“No, don’t go!” said the long-necked, long-legged, sharp-clawed emu.
“A big, scary, hairy, hungry bunyip lives in the river and he will eat you.”
“Don’t be silly! We don’t believe in bunyips!” said the children.

At last they came to the river. The children began taking off their clothes. Suddenly a big, fat, golden cod poked his head out of the water and said, “What are you doing?”
“We are going for a swim,” said the children.
“No, don’t go!” said the big, fat, golden cod. “There’s a big, scary, hairy, hungry bunyip who lives in the river and he will eat you.”
“Don’t be silly!” said the children, and into the river they dived.

And do you know, the cod was the last one to see those children.

So you must never ever go swimming without an older person with you, and never, ever go swimming alone and always obey your Elders!
Appendix 4

Living with the land

Over thousands of years of careful observation of their environment, Aboriginal people developed a detailed knowledge of food and water sources and created a wide range of tools. This is a “technology”, a valuable “how to” manual for the Australian environment and is the very foundation of one of the oldest human cultures in the world.

Aboriginal people do not separate themselves from the workings of their environment. Technology, spirituality, family and lawmaking are all part of the same body of knowledge. There is no separation between the health of the land and the health of the people. They have long known that to care for the environment is to care for all the living things; that all life is part of the enormous network of relationships that were created by the Great Spirit ancestors of the Dreaming.

Aboriginal people know too, that the Dreaming ancestors created the whole pattern of life and gave them the law which is still followed today. They know that by honouring the powers of the ancestral beings in special ceremonies, the land and its life forms will continue. Without these ceremonies, they believe that the cycles of life will cease to exist.

The NSW AECG is an Aboriginal community-based organisation made up of volunteer members who are involved in local and regional AECGs throughout the State. For twenty years the NSW AECG has been recognised as the peak body in Aboriginal education and the principal source of advice on Aboriginal education and training issues.

The AECG network includes:
- Aboriginal independent providers
- Office of the Board of Studies NSW
- Board of Vocational Education and Training
- Catholic Education Commission
- Early Childhood Education
- NSW Department of Education and Training (NSW DET)
- NSW TAFE Commission
- Universities.

The NSW AECG represents NSW community views on all education and training. The AECG has the mandate to provide Aboriginal community-based advice on all Aboriginal education and training in NSW from early childhood through schooling to all tertiary and community education.

Each year the NSW AECG Inc. convenes two State Committee Meetings and one Annual General Meeting to receive reports from providers and address issues on Aboriginal education and training.

Local AECGs feed into eighteen regional AECG meetings that are held throughout the year. All people involved in Aboriginal education and training are encouraged to be members of their local AECG Committees.
